MONDAY EVENING JAN. 29 1894.

WATTESON ON CLEVELAND.—Henry Watteisson lectured in Wilkes Hall, Pa., Friday night. Later he was entertained by the Westmoreland Club. In an interview he said:

"So far as the next democratic nomination for President is concerned I think more than likely that some man unknown now to a single gentleman in this room, myself included, will be named. It is three years before another President will be chosen, and three years in politics is a generation. As I say, the man who will be named by the democrats is quite likely to be dwelling in obscurity today. I think, however, McKinley will be the republican standard-bearer."

Asked what he thought of Mr. Cleveland personally, Mr. Watteisson said: "I want to say that Grover personally is a good fellow. He is good company when you know him well, plays a fair game of poker, takes his whisky straight and temperately and all that. But he seems to be a forecast. He won't be advised. He is bullheaded. He runs away from his party. In short, Mr. Cleveland is fatal to his friends."
